In San Francisco, on the north side of Poisom street, ovelooking Mission Bay, stands a poletial residence.

The interior of this house is even more beautiful than its exterior, every apartment being in its way a gem of assemificence and refinement.

The library especially realizes the Mr. Proble? She went out to play in red! And you have not the most perfect ideal of an elegant and, the garden, if I remember rightly, and suspicion as to who he is? cultured home.

And yet, at the moment we look upon him -one Asynst afternoon, as he occupied his library—the proprietor of all this wealth appeared of all men the most miserable.

He was Mr. Morton Preble, for many years a leading banker of San Francis-

It was in vain that the broad baywindow at the worth end of the room had been opened, giving ingress to the sunshine and the rare fragrance of flows. ers-to vain that the walls were lined with riebly carved book casss and paintings-in vain that soft couches and luxurious chairs had been gathered around bim.

He was wretched. He lay on a sofs, in the depths of the great bay-window, the wreck of a once powerful man. His figure was thin and gaunt; his face white as marble; his eyes having an expression of woful apprehension, or harrowing anxiety, of dreadful expectancy. It was evident at a glance that no. mere physical ailment had made him what he was.

By what withering socret, by what destroying affliction, had he been thus tinguished and wealthy!

As he moved restiesaly mon his laxurious cushions the pretty clock on the mantel-piece struck five, every stroke read as follows: seeming to fail like a hammer upon the heart of the nervous invalid. He aroused himself, struggling feebly to a sitting posture.

Oh, will this fatal day never, never, never pass? he murmured; nor bring ne relief. Noticing with a pervous start that he was alone, he touched a bell upon a table before him, and called: Holen | Helen | where are you? Before the echoes of his voice had died out a step was heard, and his wife entered his presence. I left you only for a moment, Morton, she said, advancing to the banker's side. You were dozing, I think .-

I wished to send for the doctor! She was a beautiful woman, of some six and thirty years, graceful, with broad white brows, and loving eyes, in which the brightness and sweetness of a sunshiny nature were still perceptible, under a grief and anxiety no less poignant than that evinced by her husband.

The doctor! he echoed, half reproach-

Yes, dear, she said in a calm and cheerful voice, as she drew a chair to the side of the sofa, and sat down, stroking the corrugated forehead of the invalid with a magnetic touch. He will be here immediately. Your last nervous crisis alarmed me. You may become seriously ill!

Mr. Preble beetowed an affectionate look noon his wife, but said despond ently:

The doctor! He cannot minister to a mind diseased! Oh, if these long hours would only pass! If I only knew, what the day has in store for un!

Look up, Morton! enjoined Mrs. Proble, with a reverently trustful look upward through the open window at the blue sky, and as if looking beyond the azure clouds therein. Let us appeal from the injustice and wickedness of earth to the goodness and mercy of Heaven!

The banker gave a low, sobbing sigh. I cannot look up, Helen, he answered, with a passionate tremor in his voice-only down, down at the grave that is opening before me!

Mrs. Proble continued to stroke his forebead sofuly, while she lifted her pale face to the sunlight streaming into the apartment.

Look up, Morton-always look up she again enjoined upon the invalid.— During all these fourteen years of agony, I have not once doubted either the goodness or the justice of Hoaven !-Blessed are they that mourn; for they shall be comforted.' I believe that we shall yet rejoice more keenly than we have mourned, and that we shall come to a glorious day of joy beyond all this long pight of sorrow The face of the invalid lighted up with an answering glow, and he mur-Glorious faith! My wife, you are indued a blessed comforter! Perhaps, after all, you are right. A knock resounded on a side door at this juncture, and the next moment Dr.

Hutton, the family physician, for whom Mrs. Proble had sent, entered the room. He was an old man, portly in figure, with white bair and beard, but with a fresh and ruddy complexion, a pair of shrewd blue even, and with an exuberant boyishness of manner that sat well upon him. He had a kind heart and a clear head. He approached the sofa, after greeting the bushand and wife, and lifted the thin restless hand of the invalid, feeling his pulse... Quite a high fever, he said, after a Worrying again, ch, Mr. Preble? You are wearing yourself out. Medicine will do you no good as Jong as your mind is in its present condition. I must give you an opiate-Not now, doctor, interposed the banker. I cannot - must not - sleep today. I need to be broad awake now, for I cannot tell at any moment what the next may bring forth. I am looking for the culmination of all my years of anguish-for the crowning agony of the whole. Perhaps even now-ab, what was that? He started up wildly, and then, as the cound that had disturbed him was not repeated, he sank back again upon his coshions, pallid and panting.
